ABSTRACT

An enrollment survey was conducted for the 10-year period of 1977-78 to 1986-87 in an effort to determine how many children were attending school within the Albuquerque Public School (APS) district boundaries in public, private, and parochial schools. The survey was conducted annually following the 20th day of each school year. The total school population of all public, private, and parochial schools located within the district ranged from 90,755 students in 1977-78 to 83,260 students in 1982-83. Since 1982-83, the total school population has demonstrated a steady increase. Public school enrollment peaked in 1977-78 with 92.5% of the total student population and declined to a low of 89.7% in 1983-84. Since then, public school enrollment has steadily increased, reaching 90% of the total student population in 1986-87. Private/parochial enrollment has demonstrated a slow, steady increase from a low of 7.6% of the total student population in 1977-78 to a high of 10.3% in 1984-85. The number of students in the private parochial sector has increased while the percentage of the total student population has dwindled. Cumulative data show that in the past 10 years the APS enrollment dropped by 3,943 students. Whereas the high school and middle school enrollment declined, the elementary enrollment increased by 3,768 students bringing APS to within 175 of the total population loss. This document contains tables that list all the 10-year information for public, private, and parochial schools, as well as for home schools. (ALL)

ADMINISTRATIVE SUMMARY

An enrollment survey has been conducted annually for the past ten years (1977-78 to 1986-87) in an effort to determine how many children were actually attending school within the Albuquerque Public School (APS) District boundaries in public, private and parochial schools. The survey was conducted annually following the 20th day of each school year.

The total school population of all public, private and parochial schools located within the boundaries of the Albuquerque Public School district ranged from a peak enrollment of 90,755 students in 1977-78 to a low of 83,260 students in 1982-83. The total school population has demonstrated a steadily increasing trend since 1982-83.

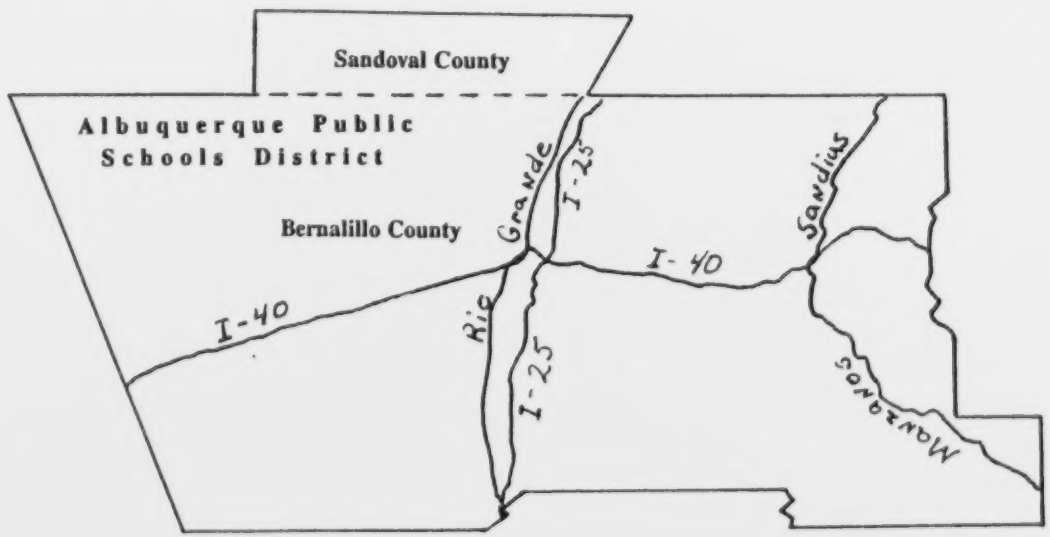
The public school enrollment reflected a peak of 83,900 students, comprising 92.5% of the total enrollment in 1977-78, and a low of 75,338, comprising 89.7% of the total enrollment, in 1983-84. The APS enrollment has continued to increase from 1983-84 to the present, and again reflected 90% of the total school population in 1986-87.

The enrollment of the private/parochial sector demonstrated a slow, steady increase, which ranged from a low of 6,855 students, comprising 7.6% of the total 1977-78 enrollment, to a high of 10.3% of the total school population, which was 8,763 pupils, in 1984-85. Since then, the number of pupils in the private/parochial sector has increased while the percentage of the total student population has dwindled slightly. These figures do not include students being taught by parents or guardians in the home (see page 9).

HISTORICAL REVIEW

An enrollment survey of the private and parochial schools located within the boundaries of the Albuquerque Public School (APS) District was begun in the fall of school year 1977-78 in an effort to learn how many children were actually attending school. These figures could then be contrasted with and added to the public school enrollment figures to determine the total school population within the APS district boundaries. The survey, continued each year, has developed an historic enrollment data base for a ten year period - 1977-78 through 1986-87.

The Albuquerque Public School District is comprised of 1,292 square miles, which includes the city of Albuquerque, the county of Bernalillo, and a section of Sandoval County which extends north four miles from the Bernalillo/Sandoval county line and west twenty-two miles from the Rio Grande towards the Rio Puerco. It is the largest single district in the state and equivalent in student population to almost one-third of the state's student population. Geographically, the school district is larger than the state of Rhode Island. The district is classified as an urban/suburban school district.



BOUNDARIES

The major suburban area originally developed between two natural barriers: the Rio Grande which flowed north to south on the west side and the Sandia/Manzano mountains which laid north to south on the east side. The mountain ranges, which were confluent but named by separate explorers, were divided by Tijeras Canyon through which U.S. Route 66 passed.

Man-made divisors to which development configured were: Central Avenue (U.S. Route 66) east to west; Interstate 40 (east to west), Interstate 25 (north to south); Kirtland Air Force Base and Isleta Indian Pueblo on the south; and Sandia Indian Pueblo on the north. In recent years the metropolitan population has expanded in all directions, hampered only by natural boundaries and federally-owned lands.

SOUTH

Isleta Pueblo lies at the southern boundary of the district, with the pueblo village located on the west side of the Rio Grande. Isleta Pueblo operates an elementary school K - 6, with grades 7 - 12 bused into either the Los Lunas district or to Polk Middle School and Rio Grande High School in the APS district. The area lying between the pueblo and the major metropolitan section is commonly referred to as the South Valley. In 1977-78, the area was still rural with the land in farms, pasture, or undeveloped open land. During the last ten years, the area has been impacted with patchwork development, unguided by zoning ordinances or a long-range development plan. This area is the lower portion of the oldest area in the district, with the other portion being the North Valley. Sections of the area are experiencing the impact of migrant population from areas such as San Salvador, Mexico, etc. The high school population has, to a considerable degree, aged out of the area. Until such time as water table problems in the area are resolved, further development will be moderate.

WEST

The area called Westgate developed on the extreme southwest section nearest the district's west boundary, south of I-40, and west of the Rio Grande. Carlos Rey Elementary served the area. Population growth created the need for a second elementary school, and Mary Ann Binford Elementary was opened in 1984. On the north side of I-40, approaching the district's west and north boundaries, west of the Rio Grande, two small communities sat like islands in a vast sea of blow sand which stretched to the Rio Puerco. Paradise Hills was served by Sierra Vista Elementary, while Rio Rancho Elementary served the Rio Rancho area. American Indian children were bused in from the Canoncito Indian settlement approximately 35 miles west of Albuquerque to attend Chaparral Elementary School, John Adams Middle School and West Mesa High School.

The area north of I-40 approaching the district's west and north boundaries, west of the Rio Grande, is commonly referred to as the "West Mesa," and became an area of high density single and multi-family housing in the late 1970's. Marie Hughes Elementary was opened in 1980 in the Taylor Ranch development between I-40 and Paradise Hills. Puesta del Sol Elementary opened in 1981 in Rio Rancho to relieve over-crowding at Rio Rancho Elementary. A new elementary school now under construction is scheduled to open in the fall of 1987. The community of Rio Rancho incorporated in the early 1980's and is presently in the process of considering the possibilities of establishing it's own school district.

NORTH

Sandoval Elementary, later renamed Corrales Elementary, is located in the village of Corrales on the west side of the Rio Grande, and was originally as far north as the APS schools went at the time. Alameda Elementary, which was built on the site of an ancient Indian settlement, and Ranchos Elementary were on the east side of the river in the North Valley, which was primarily agricultural land. The rural atmosphere has been maintained, and the price of land has resulted in a slow but gradual population impact. The open land of the North Valley area is gradually being converted to housing developments, but the price of land keeps development at a slower pace than that of the West Mesa. Although a portion of the north boundary borders the Sandia Indian Pueblo, those children do not attend APS district schools. The Ellena Gallegos land grant, which has been in litigation for many years because of the multiplicity of ownership, has prevented any appreciable development along that portion of the northern boundary.

EAST

The three schools which lie between the east side of the Sandia/Manzano mountains and the east APS district boundary are referred to as "the mountain schools." San Antonito was built in the vicinity of an ancient Indian dwelling in the Sandia range. A. Montoya Elementary and Roosevelt Middle School were built together on the Manzano side. Middle school area children are bused to Roosevelt, while the high school population is bused into Albuquerque to Manzano High School. The area has experienced considerable growth and development, which is expected to continue.

The portion of the district at the base of the Sandias on the west side of the mountain range (the urban side) originally covered acres of open mesa which monopolized development through the 1970's. Dennis Chavez and Hubert Humphrey Elementaries were the final two schools built as the population saturated the area and land costs caused the shift of the housing development impact to the West Mesa.

APS PUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENT CHANGES NOTED FROM 1977-78 - 1986-87

In reviewing the figures developed in the 10 year data base of this survey, the most obvious statistic was the fact that the APS public school enrollment dropped by a total of 3,943 pupils. The highest enrollment year was 1977-78 (1st year), with 83,900 students. The lowest enrollment year was 1983-84 (7th year), with 75,338 students. The enrollment during 1986-87 (10th year) has climbed back up to 79,957. Breaking the figures down by level, the changes were:

LEVEL	CHANGE	PERCENT
High School	- 5,253	18.73% decline
Middle School	- 2,712	13.65% decline
Elementary School	+ 3,768	10.88% increase

The consensus of opinion of demographers in the U.S. Census Bureau and private institutions had been a forecast that school population would decline to a bottoming out which would occur during the mid 1980's followed by a gradual turnaround and increase through the 1990's. This theory had been based upon the historical facts that (1) the World War II Baby Boom record high birth rates were followed by (2) the record low birth rates of the "Birth Control" era which (3) created a vacuum during which the Baby Boomers aged out of the school population and (4) no replacements were coming through the ranks.

The net result to the school system of the United States was that it swung from the problems of building and teacher shortages to the problems of surplus buildings and teachers. A major population shift across the United States has also affected school population during this time frame.

The elementary population increase of 3,768 students has returned APS to being within 175 of the 3,943 total population loss, which would seem to indicate the APS population has followed the predicted pattern and is returning to an increasing school population. The fact that the school population has continued to increase during the last two years of the survey would appear to further substantiate the assumption.

APS PUBLIC SCHOOL ENROLLMENT 1977-78 - 1986-87

1977-78: The 1977-78 public school enrollment (20th day) was 83,900. In 1977-78, the district was structured into three areas - North, South, and East. At that time there were 10 high schools, 22 middle schools, 72 elementary schools, and 3 special schools, for a total of 107 schools in the district.

1986-87: The 1986-87 public school enrollment (20th day) was 79,957. The district was centralized and administered by level - elementary, middle, and high school. In 1986-87 there were 11 high schools, 23 middle schools, 74 elementary schools, and 6 special schools, for a total of 114 schools.

The numbered diagram traces the development of the district high schools. The original Albuquerque High (1) was opened in 1914 at the corner of Central and Broadway. A period of thirty-five years passed before Highland (2) was opened in 1949, located south of Central, west of San Mateo on Coal Avenue. Valley (3) was opened on Candelaria in the North Valley in 1953, followed five years later by Sandia (4). Manzano (5) and Rio Grande (6) opened simultaneously in 1959 at what appeared to be opposite ends of the compass - to the East and to the South. Del Norte (7) opened in 1963 at Montgomery and San Mateo. West Mesa (8) opened in 1965 on the southwest mesa. Eldorado (9) opened in 1970 in the far Northeast Heights. Albuquerque high, (now sixty-one years old) had outgrown it's location and was replaced by a new Albuquerque High (*), built in conjunction with the Career Enrichment Center on Odelia, in 1975. Cibola (10) opened in 1976 on the west mesa to relieve double sessions at West Mesa and Valley. La Cueva (11) opened in 1986-87 to the north of the Northeast Heights section of the district.

PRIVATE/PAROCHIAL ENROLLMENT CHANGES NOTED FROM 1977-78 - 1986-87

The number of private/parochial schools within the boundaries of the Albuquerque Public School district doubled during the ten year period, from approximately 30 in 1977-78 to approximately 60 in 1986-87. The number of children enrolled recorded in private and parochial schools in 1977-78 was 7,246, while the number of children recorded in 1986-87 was 9,435.

The total number of Catholic schools remained the same during this period of time. However, one elementary school, St. Francis Xavier, was closed in 1982-83 when the enrollment dropped to 107 students; a second high school was opened on the West Mesa, on the campus of the University of Albuquerque, in 1984. At the present time, the campus of St. Pius X, located in the Uptown Boulevard area, has been sold and plans to move St. Pius X to the St. Joseph campus and merge the two high schools has caused considerable controversy in the Catholic community.

The major increase in nonpublic schools has occurred in schools which utilize the A-Beka curriculum, which offers a primarily nongraded setting where the child progresses at his or her own pace.

The second major factor in the development of nonpublic schools has been the availability of extended day care for children before and after school hours as the number of working mothers and single parent families continues to increase.

HOME SCHOOLS

Teaching in the home was authorized by the state legislature, and implemented by the State Department of Education (SDE) in 1985-86. Technically, the teacher in the home is to display proof of a Bachelor's degree; however, a waiver may be secured.

The applications may be sent either directly to the APS district or to the SDE. As of the 40th day, 1986-87, seventy-four people had applied for one hundred sixteen pupils to be taught at home. The APS district has no record of how many may have applied directly to the state from the district. The number of those who apply for home teaching and return to public school fluctuates to a very great extent.
